MAKE YOUR OWN

HOT BUTTERED RUM BATTER

Combine 1 cup unsalted butter 2 cups brown sugar, 1 tablespoon vanilla extract, 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon, 1/2 teaspoon each of ground nutmeg and allspice using an electric mixer until everything is blended together. This should be enough batter for 24 drinks if you follow the recipe below. Store the batter in a well-sealed iar in the refrigerator until needed. It will be ready for the first drink after about an hour and keeps well for a few weeks.

HOT BUTTERED RUM

pour 1.5 ounces of dark rum into a mug and add a tablespoon of the batter. Top the ingredients off with hot water and give it a stir. The mixture can be sweetened with honey and popular garnishes include cinnamon sticks and grated nutmeg, but that is up to you.

MADISON'S MONTGOMERY HOUSE

by Lucy Weber

nother chapter in the 170-year-old history of the spacious Montgomery House property in downtown Madison is being written as a city park and botanical garden take shape, part of the historic city center that will include planned residential and commercial developments, a big vision of Mayor Mary Hawkins-Butler's

The landmark property started out as a small pioneer structure in 1852 in the thensparsely settled region, but by 1898 had been transformed into a charming country

The city of Madison owns the house and spacious grounds now. "There is something about this place," Hawkins-Butler said last year at the groundbreaking for what will become the Madison Station Botanical Garden. "These grounds are very special."

Not a lot is known about the early days of the property, but tucked away along a winding drive on a small hill with a spacious yard across from Madison United Methodist Church on Main Street, the Montgomery House can go unnoticed.

The forerunner of the magnificent white country cottage was a simple two-room, dogtrot dwelling.

Incidentally, the unknown builder wasn't the first in the area. Just down the way and closer to Main Street is a larger house built circa 1840 by Irish immigrant John Curran. That house is the oldest surviving structure in Madison and is listed as the Curran House on the National Register of Historic Places.

Less than a quarter-mile east, the early settlers no doubt watched construction of the Illinois Central Railroad that brought big changes to the area in the way of commerce at what would become Madison Station. The tracks were finished in 1856 when trains started stopping in the area. The railroad signaled progress as more settlers and businesses quickly followed that same year. Strawberries were a big commodity.

The first known owner of the Montgomery House wasn't even a Montgomery. He was Thomas Nicholson Jones, a prominent businessman. Jones, born in 1855, and his wife, Hugh Lena Jones, born in 1865, were married in 1883.

Thomas Nicholson Jones was one of the first three aldermen of the newly chartered town of Madison in 1898 and was the first president of the new Bank of Madison in 1901.

Jones is the reason the picturesque onestory frame house looks the way it does today. The house has had no major structural changes since 1898 when Jones finished the additions and enhancements more than 100 years ago.

The much grander house that resulted is historically significant as one of the few remaining examples of late vernacular Goth architecture from the Gothic Revival Movement in Madison County. The house is considered a visible and valuable link in the state's history of architecture of that period.

The architecture reflects the prosperity in Madison Station at the time. The Madison Station area was one of the richest farming sections of the entire state, making the community in the late 1800s a railroad shipping center that brought prosperity. A new style of architecture, Gothic Revival, was admired by the wealthy landowners such as Jones who were influenced by a popular book "The Architecture of Country Houses" written in 1850 by A.J. Downing, one of the country's premier landscape architects.

An impressive façade, inspired by the book, was attached to the front of the initial structure, doubling the size of the house to four large rooms on either side of an enclosed center hall. The overall plan of the house, built with natural materials of heart pine and cypress, is one of simplicity and symmetry. The entrance is set off by one of Downing's trademarks, a wide gallery extending across the front.

In 1910, both Jones and his wife died, and the house was inherited by their relatives in the Montgomery family, in whose possession it remained until the city purchased the property in 2019. Additions were made on the back of the house in the 1900s without destroying the dignity of the historic prop-

The significance of the architecture is the reason the home is listed on the National Register. Hugh C. Montgomery and his wife Faye, the last residents of the house, were the driving force behind that nomination for the national distinction.

Hugh Montgomery grew up in the house with his father Hugh C. Montgomery Sr. and his mother Mattie. Montgomery Sr. died in 1958 and Mattie Montgomery died in 1977. Faye and Hugh Montgomery married in 1966 but didn't move to the Madison property until about 1995.

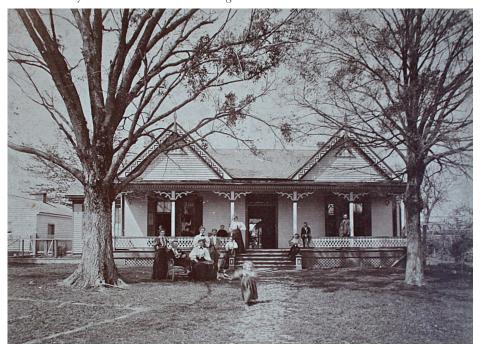

"I always wanted to move up here. I loved it here but Hugh grew up here and he did not want to go back to a house where you had to build a fire for warmth," she said.

When they did move in, Faye Montgomery said she worked to make the house reflect its history. "You need to let something Madison's history.

The city hosted events and special functions there. It was the location of the first city festival. The city seal was unveiled there. U.S. senators and Miss Americas have been entertained at Montgomery House.

The property is expected be filled with the beauty and the fragrances of roses, azaleas, hydrangeas, gardenias, daffodils, lilies and much more. A walking trail will meander through various small gardens bursting with colors and textures on the front lawn. Roses will fill one of the gardens around a gazebo. Dogwoods and camellias will be featured in another, and ornamentals and hollies in another.

"Can you imagine when you come down Main Street and see that it's preserved?" asked Mayor Hawkins-Butler.

be true to itself and find the beauty there," she said. "This started life as a grand house. The folklore that's been repeated is that it was built for a bride. It had the finest wallpapers, hand-grained woodwork. It had to be breath-taking when it was new."

Hugh died in 2018 and Faye decided to sell the house to the city because of the mayor's commitment to preserving the house and its history. "The main thing was to know it would be saved, and that appealed to me," she said.

At the groundbreaking for the botanical garden, Hawkins-Butler said the property is "one of the best things to happen in Madison. This house is part of the very heartbeat of Madison."

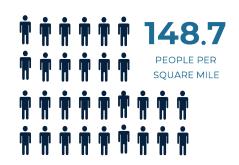

The Montgomery House, in the years before the city purchased it, played a role in

FOOD & NUTRITION TRENDS

By Jana Hoops

Like everything else, food and nutrition go through their own trends each year, with more and more discoveries we can learn about keeping our health and wellness in good shape.

We talked to two experts about some of the most popular trends to expect in 2023 about food, nutrition and wellness, learning more about what we all can all be expecting as the new year starts!

Kathy Warwick is a Registered Dietitian Nutritionist and Certified Diabetes Care Education Specialist with more than 40 years of experience in several areas of nutrition care practice. She is owner of Professional Nutrition Consultants, LLC in Madison Melissa Harrell McKissack is employed with Merit Health River Oaks in Flowood and works in the bariatric clinic helping patients with weight loss, optimizing health outcomes and quality of life. As a Family Nurse Practitioner, she has worked primarily in health and wellness, advocating health promotion and disease prevention.

Today's consumers want to know not just what the nutritional values are of the foods they eat, but where the food is grown or raised, and the sustainability practices of where it was produced. Why is that an important factor in food shopping now?

Warwick - Citing a study by the 2022 International Food Information Council Survey, Kathy Warwick points out that more than half of Americans believe their food and beverage purchases have an impact on the environment.

"Sustainability is associated with practices that conserve natural resources and reduce food waste," she said. "For healthy food to be widely available at all income levels now and in the future, sustainability also means keeping food affordable, which has become more important in times of inflation and increasing food costs."

Curbing food waste is an important key to sustainability, she said "The Feeding America organization reports that $408 billion in food is thrown away each year. Shockingly, nearly 40 percent of all food in America is wasted."

To avoid food waste, consumers are reporting that they are planning meals before shopping, freezing leftovers, and storing foods more carefully to prevent spoilage as means to reduce food waste.

Warwick mentions that Mississippians fortunately have access to a wide variety of high quality, locally grown produce, meats, dairy products, and more. Visit the Genuine Mississippi Grown website at https://genuinems.com/members/grown/ for options.

McKissack points to the possibilities of potential toxins that could impede on sustainability.

"As consumers are becoming more aware of the harmful effects of toxins to the body, they are more attentive to how agricultural products are grown and processed," she said.

She cites the writings of Dr. George Burnell, author of "Toxic Food Nation," who explains how processed foods, fat, sugar, pesticides, and antibiotics are toxic, causing "chronic inflammation to the body, which can lead to obesity, arthritis, heart disease, diabetes and many other conditions."

The United States Federal Drug and Food Administration's actions to ensure that farmers growing organic crops "are not allowed to use certain types of fertilizers, genetically modified organisms (GMOs), or pesticides" are making organic foods very popular, she said.

McKissack believes that "more and more people are making nutrition a priority, and research has found that organic foods have been found to be more nutritious than conventional foods," helping to eliminate harmful farming agents that could threaten sustainability.

Instead of short-term weightloss diets per se, there has been a shift to more of a "lifestyle change" based on meal plans such as Keto, Paleo, Mediterranean or other nutrition-guided patterns of eating. Do these types of programs really work, and are they healthful?

Warwick - As a registered dietitian, Warwick said she has "seen many trendy fad diets come and go" during her 40- year career, emphasizing that some meal plans don't always deliver on weight-loss promises and "may be difficult to sustain."

"These restrictive diets often eliminate one or more nutritious food groups such as whole grains or fruit, and people usually find that they are preparing two different meals because it may not be safe or practical for everyone in the family to follow," she said. "We do not know the long-term health effects of these diets. The current research supports moving to more plant-based eating patterns with a variety of fruits, vegetables, whole grains, nuts, and seeds, with moderate amounts of fish, lean meats, and healthy fats. The Mediterranean-type eating pattern is more closely aligned with this advice."

She also noted that a "mindful eating" trend is emerging, explaining that it involves "eating slowly and savoring flavors, working to identify when you are eating as a response to stress or other emotional triggers rather than eating out of true hunger can be very helpful."

McKissack believes using a well-planned diet program that emphasizes nutrition and wellness - and can be customized for each person - may very well encourage participants to adjust to new meal routines based on foods specifically recommended or removed from your daily diet.

"Short-term weight loss diets are just that, short-term, she said. "Most people are unable to achieve sustainable weight loss with short-term, fad diets. Essentially all efforts result in moderate weight loss with subsequent regain."

She encourages consumers to consider various meal plans or programs such as the Keto Diet ("great for diabetics"), the Paleo Diet and the Mediterranean Diet and decide if any of these programs fit their personal diet goals.

"Those who commit to the lifestyle changes not only lose weight, but they reap the benefits of an increased quality of life," she said.

In an emerging trend for 2023, shoppers may find new information added to meat packaging designating that those items are "animal welfare certified," meaning animals grown for beef, pork, chicken, eggs, and other foods are raised humanely and in quarters similar to their natural habitats. What are your thoughts on this idea?

Warwick - While Warwick believes this labeling is a good option for consumers, she adds that "many people do not realize that most farmers do all they can to ensure the health and welfare of their animals because their livelihood depends

According to the USDA, she said, consumers perceive that grass-fed beef and organic meat products are safer to consume, but "all meat processed for sale in the United States is subject to inspection by USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service under a set of scientifically based food safety criteria. The science available at this point does not clearly support the claims that these (certified) products are safer, significantly more nutritious or have greater health benefits."

McKissack believes consumers who purchase Certified Animal Welfare (CAW) meats "will likely do it for the same reasons one would choose organic fruits and vegetables. As Diane Sanfilippo, the author of 'Practical Paleo' explains, just as conventional crops pass on toxins to our bodies, the same happens with animals".

"In the United States, meat is graded based on the 'marbling,' which is the intramuscular fat swirled in the meat. While more fat in the meat may make for a tastier eating experience, the residue from exposure to pesticides, herbicides, fungicides, antibiotics, or hormones is simultaneously ingested as well. Again, toxins cause inflammation. Inflammation leads to disease."

In addition to CAW meat containing less fat, it is also proven to be more nutritious, she explained, thanks to the amount of conjugated linoleic acid (CLA), an antioxidant shown in many studies to fight heart disease, diabetes, cancer, and other health conditions.

Another rising trend since the pandemic is to grow home gardens or purchase fresh fruits, vegetables, meats, and other products at local farmers markets. Do these actions really make a difference in our overall health?

Warwick - While Warwick has long grown her own gardens, she admits that "it is a lot of work, and many factors that are out of my control can impact garden success in any given year."

IT'S THAT TYME AGAIN!

Continue the tradition of The Commissary's eggs to be ready for Easter 2023 is March 1.

At Renaissance on Highland Colony Parkway in Ridgeland (601) 366-5577 or (601) 366-1849 www.oldetymecommissary.com 🚱 🖸 That said, she believes that "most people may opt out of growing their own food" thanks to the abundance of farmers' markets in our area that provide fresh goods at a reasonable cost.

However, since everyone does not have access to fresh foods on a regular basis, she suggests that frozen and canned fruits and vegetables found in local grocery stores or dollar stores are equally nutritious.

"In fact," she said, "most frozen veggies are harvested, washed and flash frozen within hours, which preserves the nutritional value even better than 'fresh' vegetables that may have traveled several days all the way from the West coast or South America to our local grocery stores."

"The most important take-away message is that eating more fruits, vegetables, and other simple staple items will provide health-promoting nutrients without the added sugar and salt of highly processed convenience foods," she said.

McKissack agrees with the assessment of the nutritional value of fresh, garden-grown foods.

"I believe people who decide to ditch unnatural and processed foods become more empowered to eat healthier, easier, and smarter," she said.

While she is all for farmers' markets, she believes having a backyard garden is even better.

"Knowing that your food is coming from your own yard means you can be certain it is free of chemicals, and it's much more convenient to step into your backyard than it is to drive to the grocery store. Also, gardening can potentially help keep you fit because it requires some degree of labor, and from a mental health standpoint, it could likely save money," potentially decreasing anxiety caused by overpriced options at grocery stores now.

Another option she recommends for those who want a garden but don't have the space or outdoor growing conditions is using a gardening technique called the "Tower Garden," offered by the Juice Plus+ company.

"This system allows you to grow your own produce indoors or outdoors, year-round, and without chemicals or "loads of work," she noted.

The phrase "food is medicine" is becoming more common as people are seeking ways to incorporate nutrition into their health routines, and physicians are becoming more interested in "functional foods." What is your take on this idea?

Warwick - "Functional foods are certainly gaining popularity and there is a lot of research that has been conducted to support the benefits of including these foods in our diets as a way to enhance health," Warwick said.

"Interestingly, most of these functional nutrients are included in foods such as fruits, vegetables, legumes, whole grains, nuts, seeds, oily fish, dairy, fortified dairy alternatives, healthy fat sources and some herbs and spices. These functional foods often have anti-inflammatory or antioxidant properties that may play important roles in maintaining health by protecting our cells from damage. These foods are frequently higher in fiber and colorful."

She also emphasizes the importance of eating fresh foods over downing supplements to add more nutrients to one's plan for overall health improvement. "Many people feel that taking a supplement carries the same value as eating the whole food sources of these beneficial nutrients, but the science does not support this idea."

McKissack confirms the concept that food can provide healing, noting that Greek physician Hippocrates supported this idea as early as the late-400s BC when he said, "Let food be thy medicine, and medicine be thy food."

"Simply put," McKissack said, "this means eating whole foods that provide the proper nutrients for your body and avoiding processed, refined and calorie dense factory foods. Organic, nutrient-dense foods are proven to provide many health benefits."

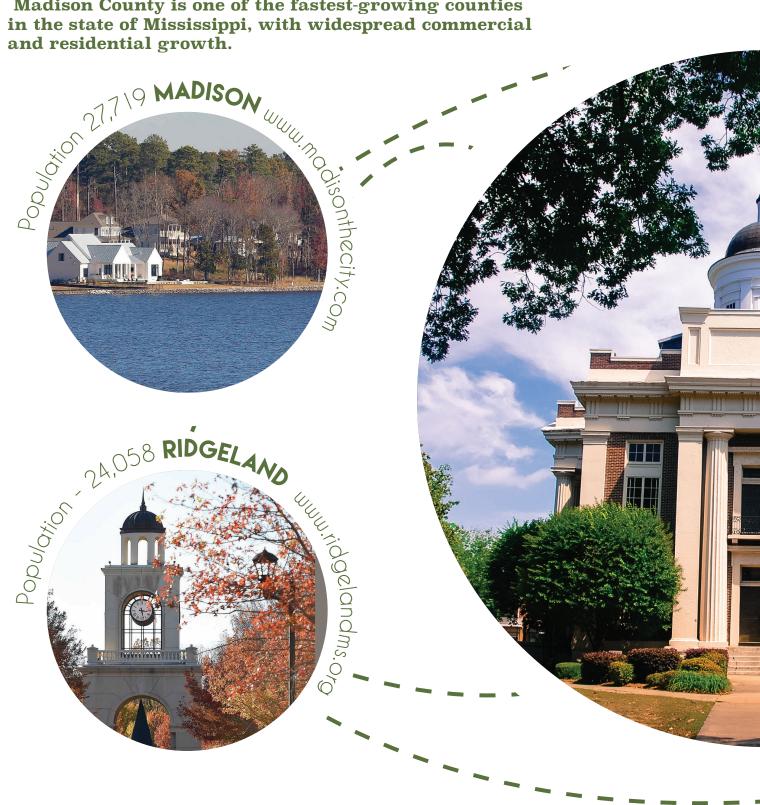

"As a primary care provider practicing evidence-based medicine, I am a proponent of the idea that 'food is medicine.' There is a lot of research supporting this idea. I believe eating food in the whole form provided by nature optimizes health benefits."

MADISON

n 1828, nine years after Mississippi was admitted into the United States, Madi-Lson County was established as Mississippi's 23rd county. Named after President James Madison, this county has a rich legacy of community living, economic development, and natural beauty. To this day, Madison County is still one of the most robust and lively places to live in Mississippi.

With a population of approximately 109,000, Madison County remains one of the fastest-growing counties in the state. Home to over 20 public schools and a dozen private/parochial schools, Madison County is known for its excellence in academic achievements.

Supported by various Chambers of Commerce and the Madison County Business League & Foundation, Madison County provides an excellent atmosphere to raise a family and build a community.

While maintaining a boisterous social calendar, Madison County is one of the largest economic powerhouses in Mississippi. Shopping centers such as Renaissance at Colony Park, Township at Colony Park, Northpark, Grandview, and Colony Crossing provide both job opportunities as well as excellent shopping opportunities for Madison County residents and visitors.

Madison County is also home to one of the largest automotive plants in North America with the Nissan Canton Automotive Plant. In addition, Amazon opened a new warehouse and distribution facility in 2022.

GLUCKSTADT

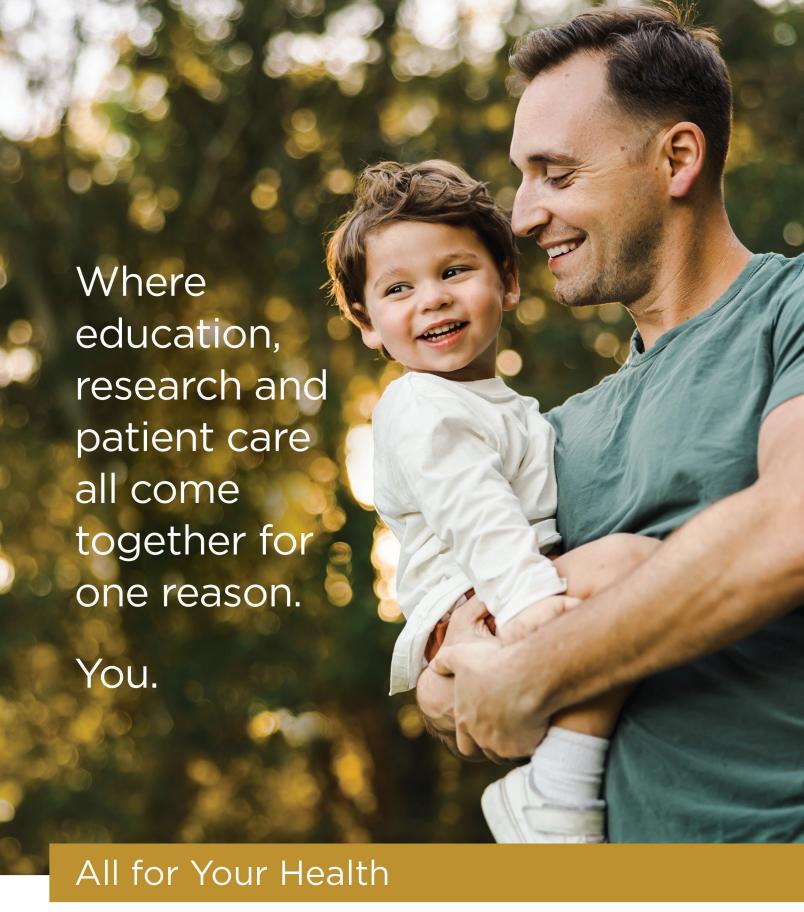

On June 17, 1905, Henry Klaas, John Kehle, Valentine Fitsch, Peter Schmidt and Joseph Weilandt, German descendents from Klaasville, Indiana, purchased farmland from the Highland Colony Company at Calhoun, Mississippi. Total cost was $22,000. Optimistically, they changed the name of the community to Gluckstadt (Lucky City). In the fall, nine families moved their household furnishings, farm implements and livestock to the South in Illinois Central Railroad "immigrant cars." Over the winter they worked to build new homes and clear land in preparation for the spring planting.

Other German-American families who joined the growing community included Henry Aulenbrock, John A. Minninger, Peter Miller, Joseph Haas, Anthony Weisenberger, Peter Endris, and Peter Minninger.

In 2021, the city incorporated to become Mississippi's newest city.

MADISON

Much like the county, the City of Madison was named for President James Madison. Originally a small railroad junction in 1856, Madison has since developed into some of Mississippi's most increasingly valuable real estate. With a population of approximately 27,747 and growing steadily, Madison is a flourishing city. Thanks to a boom of population growth in the '90s, the city limits of Madison were expanded in the late 2000s. Madison is known for its uniform commercial architecture, which gives the city a beautifully unique look. Madison continues to see economic and commercial growth as new businesses steadily move to the city. With expanding shopping centers such as Grandview Drive. Colony Crossing, and the Old Madison Station District, Madison continues to see growth and revenue. In fact, Madison has the highest rate of income for cities in Mississippi. High-performing schools like Madison Central High School and lovely public spaces for families and youth like Liberty Park make Madison one of the best, familyfriendly and safest locations to raise a family in the state of Mississippi. Madison was recognized as Mississippi's safest city in 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021 and 2022.

CANTON

If you have been to Canton, you know it holds a Southern grace that few towns can mimic. Many films have tried to capture its aesthetic on camera, like "My Dog Skip," "A Time to Kill," and "O Brother Where Art Thou". While Hollywood stars come to Canton to film their masterpieces, Canton is locally known as the county seat of Madison County. Also known for its traditional Georgian architecture, much of Canton has been listed on the National Register for Historic Places. During the Civil War, Canton saw many Confederate wounded and thusly has a notable Confederate cemetery. Another historical monument from the past is the Canton Courthouse, which survived the Civil War intact. Built in 1838, the Canton Courthouse is one of the only pre-Civil War courthouses still in operation. Today, Canton is a picturesque city with traditions that pull people from all over, such as the bi-annual Canton Flea Market. Held on the second Thursday in May and October. Canton's Flea Market is renowned within the South. Another event for which Canton is well-known is its Victorian Christmas Festival. Canton Square is lit up with Christmas lights, blow-up Santas, and carolers from miles around. Shops sell hot chocolate to the crowds and horsedrawn carriages carry children and adults alike through the glittering festivities. Canton is where you can find history, modernity, and festivities all under the same magnolia trees.
